OBJECTIVE

Fifth-year architecture student with a Franco-American educational background (ENSA Grenoble and Florida A&M University) and self-funded architectural research across 10 countries, currently seeking an internship to immerse myself in the U.S. construction industry. Alongside my academic journey, I have developed a strong interest in the new tools emerging from artificial intelligence, creating custom software and experimenting with node-based systems to enhance design workflows. These explorations complement my investigations of vernacular design—from Tokyo’s micro-housing to Delhi’s adaptive reuse projects—which have shaped my expertise in sustainable solutions and cultural design intelligence. My technical skills span BIM (Revit), parametric modeling (Rhino/Grasshopper), and construction detailing, strengthened by hands-on experience with AI-assisted design processes. I bring a unique fusion of European design rigor and American technical pragmatism, eager to contribute this global perspective while gaining practical experience with U.S. building standards and project delivery methods.
